Synopsis

Jason Walk (Robert Forster) paid a high price for being a nice guy all his life. It cost him his career, and at life's turn left him driving a taxicab as a cover for his job as a runner for a local L.A. bookie. It was a push and shove job - Jason was in the middle and everyone pushed and shoved him around. He was sick of it.

Life was good for Christine Holloway (Nancy Kwan) - a nice home, faithful husband and loving son kept her happy and secure. Then a gang led by a man named Brusstar (Joe Spinell) blew all that away killing husband and son. Her illusions were further shattered when she learned her husband had been a criminal.

It left her bitter and sour. Hatred and revenge surged through her like a deadly poison.

It was then that Christine hired Jason Walk and his taxi.

He didn't know she was blowing Brusstar's gang members away everytime they stopped. Furthermore he didn't want to know, or get involved - but when all hell broke loose he was trapped. He knew that turning the lady over to the police was like signing her Death Certificate. He realized that keeping, protecting and helping her was like signing his own. It made him realize how much he really wanted to live, and her hopeless fight was giving him the strength to stop walking the edge alone. She was giving his life a purpose and became emotionally involved - suddenly life was more than just survival.

Then Jason's best friend Tony (A Martinez) was mutilated by Brusstar's gang and Jason snapped. He became the hunter instead of the hunted.
